

Chang-Wook NAM (Keimyung University Dongsan Hospital, Daegu, Korea)

Chang-Wook Nam, M.D., Ph.D., is Professor, obtained his M.D. and Ph.D. degrees from Keimyung University, College of Medicine in Korea, where he subsequently did fellowship in cardiology. He undertook a postdoctoral research fellowship at Stanford University Medical Center. His research interests include invasive coronary physiology and imaging, coronary bifurcation lesion, analyses of vascular response and clinical outcomes with statin therapy. Prof. Nam has published more than 260 papers in peer-interviewed journals such as NEJM, JACC series, Circulation series, EHJ, Eurointervention, and has served as an editor or invited reviewer in those journals. His work was awarded the Best publication prize by the Korean Society of Internal Medicine in 2019, 2014, and 2006. He serves as a director of the Medical Information Committee in the Korean Society of Cardiology, director of Project in the Korean Society of Interventional Cardiology, president in Korean Bifurcation club, vice president of Korean Stent Failure Research club, director of special affairs in the Korean Society of Myocardial Infarction and IPOP, etc. He is also active as a member of many other Korean and international professional societies.